Records, the way they should be sold.

Medium Format is an independent record shop in Jakarta. The name comes from film photography, where medium format is the larger negative that holds more detail. It also points to what we sell: the LP, the 12-inch, the 7-inch and the CD.

We buy records carefully and sell them everywhere our customers shop: in the shop, on the website, and on the marketplaces they already use. One platform sits behind all of it and keeps stock, orders and music in sync, so the admin stays out of the way.

The identity matches how the shop works. It is plain and modern: black and white, one typeface, and a single mark drawn from a record seen side-on. Nothing is loud, and nothing is added for the sake of it.

RECORD SHOP

JAKARTA

BLACK & WHITE

Plain, and sure of itself.

Two things make up the brand: a plain wordmark and a quiet black-and-white system. The character is in the words we choose and the restraint we keep, not in decoration.

Let the records and the cover art be the most interesting thing on the page, and keep everything around them calm.

Plain

Clear words, clean layouts, no clutter. If something can come out, take it out.

Quiet

The records are the interest. The design stays in the background and lets them lead.

Confident

Say things once and mean them. No hype, no exclamation marks doing the work.

Honest

Describe what's real — the pressing, the condition, the price. Nothing dressed up.

One logo, three forms.

Use the form that fits the space, and always use the supplied artwork rather than retyping the name.

The lockup — logomark beside the wordmark. The default wherever there is room.

The wordmark — Noto Sans SemiBold.

The logomark — for avatars, icons, stamps.

Two versions. That's all.

The logo is black or white, nothing else. Pick whichever gives the cleanest contrast with the background. There is no coloured version of the logo.

VERSION	VALUE	USE IT ON
Black	#000000	White and light backgrounds, pale photography, single-colour print.
White	#FFFFFF	Black and dark backgrounds, and over photography.

Give it room.

Keep a clear margin around the logo so nothing crowds it. The margin is at least X on every side, where X is the cap height of the wordmark.

Nothing should sit inside this margin — not text, an image edge, a fold, or another logo.

Minimum clear space = X on every side. X is the cap height of the wordmark.

Small, but still legible.

Below these sizes the logo stops being clear. When space is tight, drop the wordmark and use the logomark on its own.

Logo lockup

Minimum width 160 px on screen, 28 mm in print.

Medium Format[®]

Wordmark

Minimum width 120 px on screen, 22 mm in print.

Logomark

Down to 24 px — favicons, avatars, app tile.

Keep the contrast clear.

The logo needs clear contrast with whatever sits behind it. Use black on light grounds and white on dark ones or over photos. Avoid mid-greys that leave it half-visible.

Please don't.

The artwork is final. These are the changes that come up most often, and each one breaks the logo.

Also avoid cropping the mark, putting it in a box it didn't come with, or setting it faintly over a busy photo.

Black on white, white on black.

That contrast is the whole palette. Keeping to it is what makes the brand feel like one thing across the shop, the website and print.

Colour has one job in the product: showing the state of stock and orders. Those few status colours are working signals only. They never appear in the logo or in marketing.

Black

#000000 · RGB 0 0 0

Logo and text on light grounds. The base of the dark interface.

White

#FFFFFF · RGB 255 255 255

Logo and text on dark grounds. The base of the light interface.

A few greys for the screen.

The platform needs a small set of greys between black and white for backgrounds, borders and secondary text, plus the status colours. The full values live in the design system.

SURFACES — DARK (DEFAULT)

TEXT

STATUS — STOCK & ORDERS ONLY

One typeface does it all.

Noto Sans sets everything. It's a clean, free Google font that reads well on screen and in print. For figures that need to line up — prices, catalogue numbers, barcodes — use Noto Sans Mono.

Talk like the shop.

Write the way good staff talk: clear, friendly and to the point. We work in Indonesian and English, and prices are shown in Rupiah first.

Do

- Lead with the record and why it's worth hearing.
- Be specific about the label, year and condition.
- Keep it short. One good line is plenty.

Don't

- Oversell, or invent scarcity to push a sale.
- Use jargon that shuts newcomers out.
- Pad sentences with filler.

INSTEAD OF

"INSANE restock!! Don't sleep on this absolute heater, link in bio."

WE'D SAY

"Back in stock: Khruangbin, Mordechai. A few copies on the wall — come and have a listen."

Let the records be the colour.

Pictures should feel real and unfussy: records, sleeves, the shop, hands going through a crate. Plain light and honest framing. The cover art brings the colour, so the layout around it stays neutral.

What to shoot

Records and sleeves, the shop and its shelves, the turntable, people listening. Real moments over staged ones.

How it should look

Clean and a little understated. Black and white works well for the shop itself; let the sleeves carry the colour.

A simple test: would it sit happily on a record sleeve or a gig poster? If it looks like a tech advert, take it back a step.

Out in the world.

The same parts repeat across the shop, the merchandise and the screen, held together by black, white and the mark.

Physical

Stickers and stamps use the logomark.
Totes and tees use the wordmark.

Digital

Shop, back-office, POS,
@mediumformat__,
emails.

The online shop — black canvas, white text, cover art leading, prices in mono, a Now Playing bar pinned to the bottom.

From brand to build.

Everything here becomes a set of reusable design tokens for the platform, written in the DESIGN.md format so designers and AI tools can apply it directly.

Keep it plain. Let the records do the talking.
